Aplasia cutis congenita (ACC) is an uncommon congenital disorder of absence of skin. It may be localized or widespread. It most commonly presents as a solitary lesion of the scalp. We report identical lesions of absence of skin of the scalp since birth in twin sisters.